Art & craft

French accessories firm LONGCHAMP has long been known for stylish practicality. British artist Tracey Emin, meanwhile, lives to raise eyebrows with her poetic and highly personal artworks. (Her "Everyone I Have Ever Slept With 1963-1995" is a tent embroidered with the names of 32 years' worth of bedmates.) Now the two have collaborated — some would say collided — and the result is one of the most charming bags of the season.

Dubbed the "Always Me," the cotton canvas tote is based on Longchamp's now-classic "Le Pliage," designed to fold neatly into a suitcase, ready to be unfurled and loaded with treasures picked up along the way. The Emin version is, to resort to cliché, "Le Pliage" on acid. A field of vintage-wallpaper flowers in pink or blue is appliquéd with numbers on one side and, on the reverse, the block-letter words "Always Me" (shorthand for Emin's message "No matter how much in love, you should never forget yourself"). The crowning touch: a beribboned rosette. Frankly, we can't think of a cooler way to stand out in the crowd of Chaneles and Louis Vuittons.

Chipotle Chicken Salad

OUT & ABOUT

Turning over a new leaf

It ain't easy being green — unless you're the chic salad stop GREENZ, which opens a second locale on June 3 at Addison Circle. Yes, it really has been a year since co-owners Casie Caldwell, 32, and Jennifer Huval, 34, brought their original "salads for Z'adventurous" concept to McKinney Avenue. While we've been busy crunching away on the spicy panko shrimp and chipotle chicken salads, these best friends and entrepreneurs have been launching a plan to add almost one new store a year.

The fresh Addison locale boasts 1,800 square feet, double the size of the Uptown space. Other changes include the addition of appetizers, such as jack cheese and chicken soup served in a bread bowl, and catering options, including party trays and box lunches.

These two pals know how they do all this. "We have the perfect blend for our business," says Caldwell. "Jen's got the financial right-brain side, and I've got the creative-marketing left-brain side."

They previously worked together at an Internet consulting company. When both were given their walking papers during the dot-com bust, they began brainstorming to start a business of their own.

"One thing we remembered is that at the office, we were always trying to find a really good place to get a salad for lunch," says Caldwell.

And the rest is veggie lover's history. The question remains, though: Will Caldwell and Huval, who both live in Lakewood, be able to handle a full plate of two restaurants on opposite ends of the city?

"That shouldn't be a problem," says Caldwell. "We don't have pets, and we're both still single — and looking. Oh, can I say that?" You just did.

Look book

Not many rock stars have second careers as photographers. But when Canadian rocker Bryan Adams hits Texas this month, he'll spend one night performing songs from his new album, Room Service, in Fort Worth, and that same day signing his new book, AMERICAN WOMEN, at the Calvin Klein boutique in Highland Park Village.

The book, produced in collaboration with the Calvin Klein company, captures more than 90 influential women — from Hillary Rodham Clinton to Scarlett Johansson — dressed in new and vintage Klein. Adams spent much of 2004 creating the book's glamorous black-and-white portraits of actresses, athletes, musicians, journalists and businesswomen. (Working with the celebrities was a dream," he told WWD. "But most of the time it was me versus the publicists.")

American Women is his third book of portraits and, as with its predecessors, proceeds will benefit breast-cancer charities. The reception takes place June 11 from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m., with copies of the book and a selection of limited-edition framed photos for sale at the boutique.
